

LF Perspective Integration

WHAT THIS SKILL MEANS

This skill is about representing someone else's point of view inside your own response — not just acknowledging other opinions exist, but actually voicing what that other view would say. “Some people disagree” tells the listener nothing. “Critics would argue that this approach is too expensive” actually represents the other side's reasoning, which makes your own response more convincing.

WHAT TO TRY

- When asked to consider another view, state what that view would claim — not just that it exists
- Use reporting language: critics argue, proponents claim, some would say
- Give the other view at least one full sentence of real content before responding to it

SENTENCE STARTERS

- “Critics would argue that...”
- “Proponents of this view claim that...”
- “Some would say that... but...”
- “Opponents point to [concern], suggesting that...”

EXAMPLE IN ACTION

Critics of removing standardized tests argue that without a consistent measure, admissions become more vulnerable to inconsistent judgment across reviewers — a fair concern, but the deeper issue is whether those tests were ever measuring potential in the first place, rather than access to preparation. The opposing view is given real content before the response returns to its own position.
